MINIMIZING TRASH

By Fred Michano

Martha Allen, Park Ecologist, proudly demonstrates using her new desktop miniature trash can, also known as a 'minibin', at her workstation in Pukaskwa National Park. Traditional garbage cans were recently replaced with minibins at the park office to encourage staff to reduce waste and recycle more.

MARKING HISTORY

By Nicole Cooper and Svenja Hansen

More than three dozen people, places and events have been identified as being of national significance across Northern Ontario. Over the course of 10 days and more than 3000 km, we visited 22 of these designations—getting a serious appreciation for the vastness, beauty and history of Northern Ontario.

ENDURING HERITAGE

By Mark Saari and Jeanette Cowen

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the City of Sault Ste. Marie. The lock, built in 1895, is an enduring part of its heritage. Now, operated by city staff and part of a national historic site managed by Parks Canada, the lock has a fascinating history of which many members of the community are largely unaware.
